My only issue is the total amount of collateral should be what I could have sold it for last week. So I'll come up with a different collateral amount. None of it should matter since I wouldn't sell into those before a merger. But it was between [REDACTED]. It's just a matter of fairness. In the end I want the tokens not the ether but it needs to be fair. It's about 70 million should be as collateral. It's a right thing but practically it won't matter. You understand how I operate it's about what is right and what was promised. So 350 million is way less than I would have received but I'm willing to find a medium. I would have sold last week so that average which I am saying is about [REDACTED] cents is what will be kept as collateral. My intent is to get all the tokens but we have to write it properly up front and given the merger none of this will matter anyway.
